LITIGATION SKILLS WORKSHOP

Wednesday, January 29, 10:00 a.m.–2:00 p.m.

Master the Technical Aspects of Your Civil Rights Case— The Skill of the Expert Witness Deposition

Expert witnesses with many types of expertise can play an important role in the defense of any case, but especially in civil rights cases. Police practices experts, medical professionals, correctional facility experts, and even audio and visual experts are some of the types of experts disclosed by parties in civil rights cases. Whether you need to explore and discredit the opinions of a plaintiff’s expert or make sure that your own expert stands up to the other side’s cross-examination, the art of taking and defending an expert deposition is a key skill to learn. The DRI Governmental Liability Committee has teamed up with the DRI Litigation Skills Committee (formerly “Trial Tactics”) to present a pre-seminar, hands-on workshop to help attendees learn these necessary skills, including identifying possible experts, preparing them for a deposition, and defending them at a deposition.

Take advantage of this unique opportunity to practice taking and defending an expert deposition with the help of highly skilled attorneys. The workshop will include short presentations with tips and demonstrations, and then one-on-one practice in small groups with real-time feedback. Reserve your spot now because space is limited to 30 participants. See the registration form for pricing and information on how to register.

Rule 68 Offers of Judgment

One of the tools available to defendants to resolve §1983 cases effectively is a Rule 68 Offer of Judgment. And yet, such offers are complicated and rife with pitfalls for the unwary. This session will address key issues to be considered, such as when to make a Rule 68 Offer, whether the client's consent is needed, can the offer contain conditions, should counsel fees and costs be included in the offer, and what is the effect of an accepted offer in future claims.

Whitney M. Harvey, Berke Law Firm PLLC, Phoenix, AZ

“Practical” Qualified Immunity

Qualified immunity is an important defense to individual defendants, and courts are supposed to afford it “early and often.” However, many trial courts are denying qualified immunity due to “factual disputes” and “unresolved issues.” The presenter of the session—who has twice argued before the United States Supreme Court in §1983 cases—will provide practical tips on how and when to raise qualified immunity in the life of a case, how to present it to the trial court effectively, and the timing and availability of an appeal when qualified immunity is denied by the trial court.

Philip W. (Phil) Savrin, Freeman Mathis & Gary LLP, Atlanta, GA

Choosing and Working with Expert Witnesses

Determining whether and how to use an expert witness in a §1983 case can be tricky and involves a number of case-specific issues. This session, taught by a seasoned litigator, will address a number of expert-related issues, such as the considerations that go into whether you should retain an expert; what type of experts should be used in §1983 cases; at what point in the litigation should the expert be retained; should the expert simply be a consulting expert or a trial expert; and how is the expert most effectively presented at trial. We will also address considerations and issues pertaining to attacking the opposing expert, such as should the expert be deposed, and how to use Daubert and evidentiary motions effectively to gain a strategic advantage in your case.

- 4:00 p.m. Monell Liability: Update on the Law
 While Monell is a derivative claim—and dependent on the finding of a threshold constitutional violation by an individual defendant—it is often the “tail that wags the dog” and can predominate in a case in substance, content, and defense costs. Professor Emerita Karen Blum, a longtime and popular speaker at our conference, will address recent developments in the application and analysis of Monell liability, including the growing use of “single incident” Monell claims.

■ LAND USE

Unconstitutional Takings in Land Use Cases

Public entities are subject to significant exposure when using zoning and land use power to impose overbearing conditions on residential and commercial developers. “Plaintiffs” in these cases have sophisticated and well-funded legal counsel and significant economic damages when the entity oversteps its bounds. This session will focus on claims that can arise from such “takings,” theories of liability, defenses, and the interplay with state zoning proceedings.

■ PRISON

Challenges and Claims that Arise from Initial Prison Intake

The majority of prison-based claims arise from acts and/or omissions from correctional staff in the first 72 hours from intake. This can range from misclassification, to missing signs of self-harming behavior, to detox issues and “adjustment” to prison life. This session will focus on key and emerging issues in prison litigation, and how counsel can assist corrections clients to manage and minimize these risks.

The panel of experienced claims professionals will discuss what outside counsel can do to make the adjuster's job a bit easier, what they like and need from outside counsel (and what they don't like), how defense counsel can strengthen this important relationship, and how we can better work cooperatively to serve the insured's/client's needs.
